Role of standards in the development of global knowledge economy and in the transfer of new technologies are significant. While the developed countries have long been leaders in international standardisation, transitional and developing countries remain largely passive and reap far less benefits than they could. Unfortunately, the activities of scientific and academic community in this area are still inadequate. Question: „How can cooperation among standardisation organisation, scientific and academic community contribute to achieving technology catch up in transitional and developing countries?” – still need to be answered.

All these years, since the first conference in Thessaloniki in 1997, the conferences “STANDARDISATION, PROTOTYPES AND QUALITY: A MEANS OF BALKAN COUNTRIES’ COLLABORATION”, have been good opportunity for scientists and specialists from Balkan Countries, as well as from all over the world, to exchange experience and knowledge of standardisation, quality management and related disciplines. The 11th International Conferences of the Balkan Countries, after the successful 10th Conference in Sozopol - Bulgaria, will be held as back to back conference with 19th EURAS Annual Standardisation Conference (8-10 september, www.euras.org). The scope of the 11th International Conference is to contribute to the Balkan Countries’ development by calling attention to cooperation among standardisation organisations and the scientific and the academic community

Sample areas of paper topics include standardization and related disciplines in: society; services; education; health care; environment; production and in logistics; food, goods and consumers; constructions; agriculture; measurements-tests and controls; accreditation and certification and other related topics.
